“NAV CANADA - A Model For Commercializing Public Enterprises”

The search for optimal models of offering public services has its occasional successes. Notable among these in the last decade are reforms in the rules that govern public transportation. Deregulation and privatization of the airlines, airports, railways and ports in Canada - although not without hiccups and unexpected consequences - have produced measurable benefits. Millions more people flew, the CNR became efficient and profitable, the Port of Churchill was reborn. One of these success stories is the private company that handles air traffic control in Canada, NAV CANADA.
